HONGKONG, MARCH 4TH, 1868.

More and more distinctly as time passes does the public opinion of the colony declare itself adverse to the destruction of the Mint. The subject, in spite of that conference with the bankers, has not yet been quite fairly treated. The bankers were summoned to the meeting without any previous warning; they came altogether unprepared to deal with the matter, and had no opportunity to discuss the question amongst themselves. A very different result might have ensued if they had received three or four days notice from the Government, and had been enabled to concert a policy in the first instance before being called on to commit themselves definitely. We are not making any statement, it will be understood, on behalf of the bankers, we are writing altogether on the public facts of the transaction, but a mere superficial view of the case at once leads one to imagine that the bankers might not be prepared to make offer due time for consideration. Another point has to be considered in reference to the whole affair. At a conference between the officials of the Mint, it is very evident that the Mint should have been unprepossessed by the officer of its head. A Master of the Mint, like the captain of a ship, may very often, no doubt, take a more enthusiastic view of his craft than others would be inclined to do, but at the same time he may be able to suggest some ideas on the subject which would not occur to other persons. Why Mr. KINDER was left out of the conference of the other day we cannot understand. If he holds any unsound views on the subject of the Mint, it is hardly probable that their exposition would be injurious in the face of the collective financial wisdom of the colony. Of course, the Government of Hongkong is conducted on a principle which leaves no room for the community to say or to do anything by its own independent action. If the Governor likes to shut up the Mint, or burn it down into a lunatic asylum, there is nothing to be done; but, if the community is consulted at all about an important measure, we think it has a distinct claim to be consulted seriously.

If this Mint problem is to be dealt with earnestly, and if all reasonable efforts are to be made to keep the institution alive, there are a great many things which might be done yet. It must surely be accepted as the fundamental proposition, about which all persons are agreed, that if the Mint can be kept up in readiness for contingencies which may arise, without being, meanwhile, a heavy burden to the colony, such a course ought to be followed. There are two ways in which it is possible that this result might be accomplished. It remains to be seen whether the banks would not rather undertake to coin a given number of dollars each per annum, than see the Mint destroyed, or the problem might be solved another way. The Mint, as we suggested the other day, might be, so to speak, put out of commission and kept up in ordinary, without being broken up and sold off, and, in order to retain the opportunity of re-instating it at some future time, it might be worth the while of the banks to subscribe the limited cost of its maintenance, on the footing supposed. Again, it might be worth the while of the colony itself to go to that small expense, rather than see the place, on which such enormous sums have been sunk, finally annihilated. Yet another course might be feasible. A company might be formed to work the Mint under a Government charter. That course would perhaps be a little unusual, but there is nothing in the idea radically incompatible with the functions a Mint has to discharge. Indeed, the coinage of Great Britain is largely manufactured by private enterprise in Birmingham manufactories, which are nothing in the world else but private mints. We should say it would be quite feasible in Hongkong, just now, to organize a Mint company, which should take the establishment at East Point off the hands of the Government, on terms which would not, in any way outrage the dignity of the Government, and would leave it all necessary control over the operations of the Mint.

Embodying much that has been said in the colony since the Mint conference was held, we do, therefore, make an emphatic appeal to the Government on behalf of the Mint. The conference which has been held on the subject, though very fairly intended, we make no doubt at all, proved abortive by reason of the hurried manner in which it was called together. If the Mint be closed now, as the question at present stands, there is but one thing that will be said in the place to the end of time, namely, that the Government had conceived an animosity to the Mint, and shut it up in spite of remonstrance and liberal offers from the financial community, when he might have kept it in readiness for better times at no expense to the colony. We know that the veterans of the public service care very little personally about what "is said" of their acts, but at the same time it is always desirable, when that is feasible, that a Government should not alone do right, but be known to do right, be comprehended and regarded in a friendly spirit. Moreover, in this Mint matter we believe that positive and tangible results would accrue from an open, candid, and conciliatory policy on the part of the Government just now. Another conference might be held under circumstances better conducive to success than those which prevailed before. The conference might be appointed for a fortnight in advance of the invitations, and its circle might be somewhat extended. Above all, the Government might intimate that it would be prepared to take into consideration offers from a sufficiently responsible and trustworthy body of men, to form a company, for taking over the establishment as it stands, and working it at their own expense.

Police Intelligence, March 3rd.

BEFORE F. W. GOODLAKE, Esq.

ASSAULT ON BOARD THE "BELTED WILL."

James Goodie, able seaman, on board the Belted Will, was charged with being drunk, and assaulting his officer.

Mr. John W. Gardiner, second officer of the Belted Will, stated that yesterday, when he was on the quarter deck, the prisoner, who was the worse of liquor, came up to him, called him a foul name, and struck him in the face.

Capt. Locke, who was in court, said the prisoner was a good seaman, and had behaved well, but that when the crew had money given them they all got drunk.

Mr. Goodlake said it was well for the prisoner that his Captain gave him a good character. Hoabould pay 6 days of five dollars, or one week's hard labour.

THE GRASS CUTTING AND WOUNDING CASE.

In this case, Tsun-a-fook, accountant, Fung-a-chee, interpreter, and Lo-kee, coolie, who had given evidence for the defence in the case at the Supreme Court, and had there committed perjury, and also been identified as having aided and abetted in the assault, for which two men were sentenced at the sessions. Some days were spent at the first appearance in the Police Court of the three delinquents and the arrangements made between the bench and counsel engaged, for a remand until to-day, the prisoners being admitted to bail, two securities of $2,500 for Lo-a-fook and Fung-a-chee, and one security for $1,000 for Lo-a-kee.

On the case being called this morning, the prisoners did not answer to their names, and Mr. Whyte, who was retained for the defence, informed their worships that he could throw no light upon the matter, as he had been informed by Mr. Caldwell that the men had "bolted," but he would, nevertheless, ask their worships to give the bail time to find the runaways." Mr. Goodlake said he did not think his worships were to blame for the prisoners' way, but would be to extract the recognizances, and afterwards, should the men be forthcoming by Saturday or Monday next, to the money refunded by petitioning the Governor.

Mr. Hazeland said that was the way in which he himself thought the matter had better be settled. The Chinese seemed to profess such an acquaintance with Pedring, the Merchants of Singapore, that Pedring, the Merchants of Singapore, that Pedring, the Merchants of Singapore, that

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

NEWS FROM THE NORTH.

By the Swatow, from Shanghai, we have dates to February 29th. There is no news of any importance. The following items are from the North China Daily News:—

A new Masonic Lodge is to be opened at Ningpo on the 25th. A number of Brethren of the Order left yesterday afternoon by the Kiangsi, to assist at the ceremony.

The barques Kowloon and Tribe were sold on the 25th for Taels 9,450 and 11,600 respectively.

So much has been said about the insufficient rank of the Chinese attendés of the new embassy which leaves us this morning, that it may be well to give a complete list of its members and their relative standing. Mr. Burlingame's rank as Minister Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, and that of Mr. J. Mol. Brown and Mr. de Colange as first and second Secretaries is well known. Next come two Natives, Chih-tsin and Sun-ta-jen, the former a Manchu Tartar, the latter a Chinese, both in the second grade of officials,—that is to say, ranking on the civil list with a Vice-President of a Board at Peking, or with a Governor of a Province. They have been Secretaries in the Foreign office since its establishment, and are both reputed intelligent men. They go with the rank of "High Minister." Next come six student interpreters, who have been studying for the last five or six years at the Foreign school in Peking; two who accompanied Pin on his excursion, two years ago, speak fair English, two French, and two Russian. Two writers, a doctor, and fifteen or sixteen servants complete the catalogue.

Mr. Gower, Lord, Jervis and Holberton have been elected Stewards for the Spring Races. The following paragraph announces a curious literary "strike":—

"The Shaw-kan candidates for the "littlego" of the B. A. degree, have beaten the district magistrate of that place, and refused to sit at their examination. This feat is called pa kao, or the literary "strike," by which the matriculating or graduating students express from time to time their sense of disapprobation of some offending mandarin, whose connection with their examination they thus indignantly resent.

It appears that in addition to minor offences against the Confucian code, this blue buttoned officer has been a kind of Blue-beard, having ill-treated his former wife, and married another, more equal in rank and condition. He is of the military school, like the majority of the present holders of civil offices. Between such and the literary body, these is perpetual feud and fight, in resentment of this usurpation of offices primarily the reward of literary excellence.

Navvies.—"Navvy" is synonymous in most mind with a very rough and powerful man, and justly so. None but very hardy men could possibly execute the work of the navvies. It is but little known, however, that a very severe ordeal has to be undergone by the novice, failing in which his pluck and spirits were cut off, figuratively speaking, and he could not hope to be admitted into the honorable company of excavators. He was looked with jealousy and dislike upon each new comer, especially if he came, as soon grew to be the case, from any of the southern or western counties; and they took extreme pleasure in making his entrance to his new life as disagreeable as possible. The novice was bound to wheel a barrow all day long from the spot where the men were filling to another spot where the same was emptied, two yards from some accidental cause, no doubt, came to be fixed all over England as the distance to which the navvies, when digging for a cutting, were bound to remove their earth. So skilful were the diggers at piling this on the shallow, insignificant-looking barrows, which the reader has doubtless often noticed, that the load would sometimes weigh more than eight hundred weight, and reach to the chin of the wheeler. But this wheeler must—when fit, or full, and he scouted for good and all, from that district at any rate, as a navvy. Those who succeeded did so by wonderful strength and pluck—there is no word not "plus" which conveys exactly what I mean. A man has been seen to wheel his load, a load piled up by cynics, as the saying runs, "to the shape of a cocked hat," up a steep plank, with the blood oozing and spirting from his hands, with the blood oozing and spirting from between his fingers. All that could be done to taunt and deter the novice was done, yet no one more admired the triumphant stranger than the very men who had sought to baffle him. There was, moreover, a sort of guarantee for fair play; the man who filled the barrow for the novice had to wheel it for a few yards himself. The road of plank from the excavation to the spoil-heap forked as it approached the diggings; the empty barrow was brought along one, the full barrow was taken along the other; but the digger always had, and has now, to wheel it to the junction. If he could not wheel it, neither could the novice, and the fellow was fined pretty heavily. Those among the novices whose pockets were well supplied to enable them to stand plenty of beer during the first day or two of their probation, got over a great deal better, as the way of lightly filled barrows, these did their poorer comrades.—Cassell's Magazine.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Tuesday Evening.

There is no change to report in the Drug market. Transactions to day have been on a limited scale, at the following rates:—New Patna $702½; New Benares $685; Old Patna $672½; Old Benares $672½ to 3680; second sales New Patna $3624 to $3633; Malwa $700 to $705, with sellers.

There has been some inquiry to-day from the Chinese for piece goods, but they as yet evince great caution in approaching the market. A few sales are reported, including 200 pieces 7lb. Grey Shirtings at $2.20. 8 bales Jopia Yarn at $1174, and 30 bales at $120. A sale of 814 Grey Shirtings, reported in these columns yesterday at $2.20, should have been at $2.871. This was part of a large purchase by a foreign speculator, made last week, of 25,000 pieces, to arrive, at $2.20 to $2.37½. Cotton has been dull again, and only 131 bales Bengal were placed, at $13.99 to $16. There is a been rather more doing in Produce to-day, but the market presents no new feature. With the exception of a very material advance in Steamboat, there is nothing to report in shares. Of these over 400 have been placed at par, and there are further sellers at this rate.

SALES OF MARCH 3RD, 1868.

As reported by Chinese.

Cotton Yarn, 5 bales, at $100.92 by Fook-mow-loong to Canton merchant.

Black Drugs, 200 piculs, at $1.95, by Tai-foong-chun to Tung-kwan merchant.

Green Tea, 900 piculs, at $2.20, by Kin-foong-hong to Tung-kwan.

Intermix, 10 bags, at $12.80, by Kin-foong-hong to Hai-foong merchant.

Tortoise, 18 bags, at Tls. 68.0., by Wo-lee-yue to Hai-foong merchant.

Coffee, 108 piculs, at $11.55, by Kin-cheong-hong to Woo-hee merchant.

The Reform Bill Year.

(From the Saturday Review.)

But England has had to go through worse things this year than can be caused by physical catastrophes or pecuniary losses. She has found herself tainted with a moral poison, and has witnessed the most audacious acts of assassination, murder, and general lawlessness committed in the midst of a peaceful and loyal society. Fenianism, and the Trades' Unions of Sheffield and Manchester, have shown that men with and Manchester, have shown that men with the hearts and feelings of savages may live and plot and work their will for a time in a country that thinks itself at the head of civilization. We know something of Trades' Unions before, and were aware that there was something to be said both against and for them; and how much could be fairly said on either side it was much could be fairly said on either side it was entrusted to a Commission appointed early in the year to discover. The ordinary kind of strikes have gone on as usual. The engineers on the North-Eastern and the Brighton lines suddenly struck in the spring, and caused great temporary confusion; but the firmness of the Directors of the former railway gave, in the long run, a most useful lesson to those who thought they had the public at their mercy. For many months London was troubled with a great strike of tailors, and men who had been accustomed to the misery of wearing constantly new clothes were nearly driven to the luxury of wearing old ones, which there, too, the masters prevailed; and the law being declared by Baron Bramwell to forbid picketing, the men acquiesced, well to forbid picketing, the men acquiesced, and the struggle ended. But, if we were prepared for strikes, we were not prepared for the wholesale system of maiming and assassination and contrivances to disable hard-working men for life, which was disclosed as the ultimate fruit of Trades' Unions when presided over by such men as the sawgrinders of Sheffield and the bricklayers of Manchester. In the early part of the year a host of demagogues, under the name of the Reform League, contrived to attract notice by mischievous meetings and demonstrations in London, and the Government, afraid to do anything unpopular, permitted serious infringements of public order, if not of peace, which have borne fruit in the increasing audacity of political desperadoes. The horror which the Sheffield revelations caused has, however, been eclipsed by the terror and indignation excited by the new place and mode of assassination which Fenianism has assumed. That there should be a rising in Ireland seemed possible, and perhaps probable, in the continued influx of desperate adventurers from the United States, which prevented the fulfilment of the promise to restore the Habeas Corpus Act had not, in the Queen's Speech, was known to be caused by excitement in Ireland among classes too ignorant and reckless to appreciate the inevitable consequences. In the middle of February there was a very feeble outbreak in the south; and early in March a more serious movement, almost threatened Dublin itself. But the rebels, who were mostly silly shopboys and lunatics, equally unfitted for the realities of a campaign, were at once dispersed and driven to wander, and in many cases die, among the hills during a month of unusually cold weather. The rising was not thought serious enough to justify the punishment of death being inflicted on the misguilty, and Burke, the most prominent, primoner, was spared, against the judgment of the Ministry, but in deference to the voice of general opinion. But it soon appeared that Penitential opinion. But it soon appeared that Penitentiary discipline had been made in February already sensible had been made in February to sense. Chester Castle, and in September Allen and his comrades strutted through British public by their desperate, though unsuccessful public by their desperate, though unsuccessful endeavour to release Kelly and Deasy from the custody of the Manchester police. As on this occasion a policeman in the discharge of his duty was actually killed by the assailants, the three men immediately guilty of his death were most justly executed. This led to processions and mock-religious ceremonies, both here and in Ireland, in honour of the "martyrs!" and it was only after seventy-six thousand persons had spent a Sunday in marching about Dublin, talking treason, that the Government made up its mind to forbid such gatherings. Scarcely had this been done when the whole country was startled into a burst of horror and indignation by the attempt to blow up the wall of the prison at Clerkenwell, in order that two of the prisoners might escape, and with entire indifference to the deaths and agonies and losses inflicted on the whole neighbourhood of poor people living hard by. The audacity of the attempt has had, however, the good effect of arousing London to defend itself by a general co-operation with the police, and its monstrous wickedness has had the good effect of doing more than anything else could have done to discredit Fenianism even among the Irish.

In English political history the bygone year will be chiefly known as the year of the Reform Bill. Now that some months have elapsed since the Bill was passed, we are better seeing more used to the fact, and its existence seems more natural, not because we can better estimate its effects, but because everything in political talk and purpose is now accommodated to the tenor of this famous measure. But the length of time diminishes the wonder with which we are filled when we bring back to recollection the history of the process by which the Bill came to be passed. In the beginning of February the Cabinet met Parliament without having come to the conclusion that a Reform Bill was necessary. At the end of October Mr. Disraeli informed his astonished Edinburgh that he had been for years educating his party to stand household suffrage, and that they had now learnt their lesson. Since the conversion of the Gothic hordes from Paganism there has been no conversion so multitudinous, so complete, so immediate. The squires have not only been told, but have been compelled to believe, that household suffrage is the true secret of Conservative strength, and that the principles of that measure constrast to the wisdom and patriotism of a class of voters too abject, ignorant, and dependent for even Mr. Bright to wish that they should be entrusted with political power. The stages by which this wonderful result has been reached are so familiar that they may be briefly recounted. A paragraph about the Reform Bill, which left it open to the Ministers to do anything or nothing in the matter so that "the balance of the Constitution was preserved," was followed by a vague, hazy speech from Mr. Disraeli, introducing a set of impracticable Resolutions, through which however, two ideas were required—that no class was to have the ascendency, and that reductions of the franchise were to be accompanied by safeguards. The Resolutions were pronounced by unanimous opinion to be utterly useless, and at length, on the 25th of February, the Cabinet produced its famous Ten Minutes' Bill, so called from the amount of time which it had taken the Cabinet to decide on a vast change in the English Constitution. This Bill, disapproved of by all the persons who proposed it, was equally displeasing to both parties in the House of Commons and to the nation. Accordingly it was withdrawn, and another Bill was brought forward, based on household suffrage, with a variety of what were playfully called safeguards. These of the ablest of Lord Derby's colleagues gave up office because they thought these safeguards illusory, but the rest of the Cabinet stood firm to office, and gradually discovered that these safeguards were not only illusory, but unnecessary. The House having a Bill thrown before it with which it was allowed to deal as it pleased, and a Ministry determined to pass a Reform Bill at all hazards, was determined to have a Bill passed, and swept away the opposition of Mr. Gladstone, who wished to reject the Bill because it was bad. Mr. Disraeli triumphed over his formidable rival by taking advantage of the personal unpopularity of the Opposition leader, and by convincing the majority of the House that if they did not support the Ministry they could have no Reform Bill, but that if they did support the Ministry they could have any Reform Bill they pleased. A decisive division was taken on the 13th of April, and a majority of twenty-one pronounced in favour of having the conduct of the Bill in the hands of Mr. Disraeli. All the safeguards proposed by the Ministry—the dual vote, educational franchises, voting papers, and two years' residence—were successively swept away, and even the terrible Compound Householder, who had sprung up almost accidentally as a guardian of Conservative principles, was all of a sudden buried in total oblivion. On one point only Mr. Disraeli was successfully firm. He would not extend his very limited scheme of redistribution; and as every one felt that a large extension of the scheme was only a question of time, and a very short time, if household suffrage was established, he had no real difficulty in carrying his point. The House of Lords expressed a profound and almost unanimous horror of the Bill; but it is possessed of far too much political experience to permit England to be brought to the deadlock which has paralysed all Government under the infinitive Constitution of Victoria. It shuts its eyes and boldly swallows the poison. It shuts its eyes and boldly swallowed the poison. Its cup offered to it, merely contenting itself with instituting in a feeble and insidious form the representation of minorities. Finally, with the cheerful versatility of a constitutional sovereign, the Queen, in her speech at the end of the session, expressed the extreme pleasure with which she gave her assent to a Reform Bill, entirely opposite in every respect to the Bill which in her speech at the beginning of the session she had been advised to foreshadow.
